At the conclusion of this training, participants will be better able to:

- Define the role of advocates who provided services for women and children in contact;
- Provide safety planning with women who remain in their relationships or stay in contact with current or former abusive partners;
- Explore battered women's risk analysis and decision-making, including why they remain in relationships or in contact with ex-partners;
- Work with victims to develop more options, strategies, and resources for victims who decide to stay;
- Shift the expectation of leaving to preserving the victim's right to make decisions about her life and her family; and
- Explore and build opportunities for the children's well-being in addition to preventing future harm to the children.

Advocacy Beyond Leaving: Safety Considerations for Families Who Choose to Stay Together

July 13, 2012

Horry-Georgetown Technical College
Burroughs & Chapin Auditorium
2050 Highway 501 East
Building 1100, Room 303
Conway, SC 29526

Hosted by the South Carolina Coalition Against Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault and the South Carolina Department of Social Services

About the Presenter, Kenya Fairley

Kenya Fairley is a lifelong advocate to end domestic and sexual violence against women and girls. As Program Director of the National Resource Center on Domestic Violence (www.nrcdv.org), Kenya oversees the technical assistance, training, and resource development components of the organization.

She also coordinates the National Domestic Violence Awareness Project, (www.nrcdv.org/dvam), which creates a forum for a diverse group of professional advocates from national organizations and culturally specific institutes to provide input on issues of national importance; those emerging issues and ideas are then converted into resource tools and materials for use by advocates and allies.

Kenya's background is in victim advocacy, project management, training, and child welfare.
